Previous studies of the relationship between social structural changes and individual-level perceptions have focused on perceptions of 'well-being'. Those studies conclude that relative position in the social structure (e.g., more or less income compared to others) determines perceived 'well-being'. In contrast to those studies, this research focuses on social structural changes and ...

Introduction []. In sociology, a group is usually defined as a number of people who identify and interact with one another. This is a very broad definition, as it includes groups of all sizes, from dyads to whole societies. While an aggregate comprises merely a number of individuals, a group in sociology exhibits cohesiveness to a larger degree. Aspects that members in the group may share ...
