The main exit strategy for startups is to sell the company to a bigger one for a profit. The same goes for investors. The buyer takes over the startup using cash or stock as a compensation, and key executives and employees from the startup often stay at the company for a period of time in order to be able to cash out and vest their stock.

What are the best exit strategies for startups and investors?

The traditional exit strategy When investors sit for pitches from startups, they expect the startups to cover the exit strategy. That usually means talking, in the pitch and in the business plan, about how similar companies in similar markets have been able to exit via selling out to a larger company.
